You know I what think?, and to hell with it if it stuffs with your terms of reference. We are not allowed to backdate our concerns.

I think that allowing a court or tribunal to give good weight even in administrative law, to whether a party (or member of parliament) has taken donations from a person of interest , from whatever state or territory, would give the people an even chance

That was the political bit.

I'm all In favour of lowering the threshold to 1000K .

I'm in favour of all citizens showing ID when voting and I hope it will put a rocket up your arses and you will have to solve the situations if it means a citizen can't vote (and don't you give me non paper shit, ELECTRONIC VOTING is a whole world of trouble.)

You lot know it that people are relentless and it happens at local government level by donating to the state party. We all know that you don't care and the federal electoral system is the way we will eventually get you all.

If you want to do something, give courts and tribunals power to decide on your ministerial decisions with regard to the donations you take. I'm talking environmental law.

We have the developers, and you need their history and it means "of what they want".

I pull out that business with Laurence Lancini here in Townsville, just a couple of grand here and there then WHAM 50K in 2008 to Labor and you can follow Mooney's history after that and add the back story. Uhum! At the time , Labor Feds , Labor state, and council at the time, Flinders Mallheeeelloooo

In short, I think you lot do business with your donors and I'm not alone so get stuffed.`

Yours Sincerely

Pat Coleman
